Message from the President

Dear Congregant,

In lieu of a President's Message this month, I am choosing to reprint the sermon of Rabbi Jason Mark from the second day of Rosh Hashanah. Nothing I could say could be more poignant or more relevant to us at this time. Even if you were present to hear the sermon, I believe that you will enjoy reading his thoughts again.

B'ahava,

Margie Siegel, President

Rabbi Jason Mark's Rosh Hashanah sermon, September, 2026.

As many of you know, this past year I moved from West Virginia down to Memphis, Tennessee. What many of you might not have known was how deeply I loved living in West Virginia. I prayed and meditated every day looking out over beautiful mountains, I had wonderful, caring friends, loved the people I worked with, and found deep meaning in my work. It was the kind of place that helped me fall more deeply in love with life.

When I arrived in Memphis, I thought I was ready to embrace something new. And there was so much to embrace; the greenery, the music scene, new people, and new possibilities. But I noticed that I kept comparing everything in front of me to everything I had left behind. This wasn't quite as beautiful as West Virginia. These people weren't quite the friends I missed. Again and again, the new seemed to be competing with the old.

And the strange thing was that I wanted to love what was new. I wanted to embrace the new people and possibilities in front of me. But eventually I realized that in trying so hard to welcome what came next, I had not allowed myself to really say goodbye to what had been.

We usually associate grief with death. But there is grief woven into so many of the transitions of our lives.

A move, the loss of a job, a friendship that changes, children growing older or a congregation that no longer looks the way it once did. Even changes that are necessary, chosen, or filled with possibility come with the pain of that which is no longer present.

We stand now at the beginning of a new year, and I think that in many ways this season pulls us in two different directions. On the one hand, these Holy Days ask us to look backwards. We reflect on the year that has passed and turn inward through introspection, thinking about how we have shown up in our lives and in our relationships. This season also turns us towards memory. So many of my conversations with you all at this time of year are about what this congregation used to look like, the people who once filled this room, and the memories and traditions that have shaped this community.

But Rosh Hashanah is also about looking forward. It is the beginning of something new. We think about the year that lies ahead of us, the changes that we want to make, and the kind of lives that we hope to live. And so I think there is a real tension built into this time of year. How do we allow ourselves to grieve and remember what has been lost, while at the same time still leaving room for hope? How do we honor what came before without allowing our memories of the past to keep us from embracing what might still be ahead of us?

There is a moment towards the end of the third chapter of the book of Ezra that I think speaks beautifully to this tension. The Jewish people have returned to Jerusalem after decades of exile in Babylonia. The First Temple had been destroyed, Jerusalem had been left in ruins, and now, after years away from their homeland, the people begin the process of rebuilding the Temple. It should have been a moment of pure celebration. But that is not quite what happens.

The people gather together in Jerusalem and begin rebuilding the altar and laying the foundation for a new Temple. And when that foundation is finally completed, the community erupts in celebration. The priests stand with trumpets, the Levites with cymbals, and the people praise GD for bringing them to this moment. For many of them, this must have felt like an impossible dream becoming real. After destruction, exile, and years away from Jerusalem, they were finally beginning again. They were rebuilding not just a building, but a center of communal and spiritual life that had been taken from them. But not everyone responds to the moment in the same way. Ezra tells us that many of the older priests, Levites, and leaders of the community who had seen the First Temple with their own eyes began to weep. While one part of the community is shouting with joy at what is being built, another part is crying as they remember what once stood in that very place.

And then the chapter ends with a beautiful image. The crying and the celebration become so loud, and so mixed together, that the people can no longer distinguish one sound from the other. One part of the community is rejoicing over what is being built and another is weeping over what has been lost. And somehow both sounds rise up together from the same place.

The older members of the community are not opposed to rebuilding the Temple. They are not rejecting the future or wishing that everyone would stop celebrating. But the joy of what is being built does not erase their memory of what has been lost. And at the same time, their grief does not stop the community from building.

We do not have to choose between grieving what has been lost and hoping for what might still be possible. Both can be true at the same time. The beginning of a new year does not erase the years that came before it. We carry those years with us, we carry the people we have lost, the relationships that have changed, the disappointments we experienced, the versions of ourselves and our communities that no longer exist in quite the same way.

But we also stand at a moment filled with new possibilities. Ezra describes the joyful shouting of the people as a teruah, a joyful teruah. That word, of course, is deeply familiar to us. Rosh Hashanah itself is called Yom Teruah, a day marked by the sound of the shofar. But in Ezra, this sound does not ring out alone. It arises from a community in which people are also crying. The sound of joy rises alongside the sound of grief until, from a distance, the two can no longer be separated.

And so as the shofar sounds throughout the course of the day today, I want to invite each of us to hold two things in our hearts. First, to name something from this past year or perhaps from many years ago that we are still grieving and carrying with us. Something that has changed, something that we miss, or something we wish we could carry with us exactly as it once was. And rather than pushing that grief away in the name of a fresh start, to allow ourselves to acknowledge it.

And I also want us to name something that we hope for. Something we want to build. Maybe a relationship we want to deepen, a part of ourselves we want to discover, a way in which we want our community or our world to become.

And so, as we enter this new year, may we have the courage to grieve what has been lost without giving up on what might still be possible. May we have the wisdom to carry the past with us without becoming trapped by it. And may the sound of the shofar remind us that joy and grief can rise together, as we continue to build lives, relationships, and communities filled with meaning, hope, and blessing.

Shanah Tovah.

Shanah Tovah! We hope you and your family had a meaningful and joyful High Holy Day season and that the New Year brings you health, happiness, and many blessings. As we look ahead to October, we're excited about all that is happening at our synagogue! We have a wonderful variety of activities planned, with opportunities to learn, connect, and enjoy time together. Be sure to take a look at what's coming up, mark your calendars, and join us throughout the month.

Everyone is invited to view the beautifully classic film "Avalon" (1990) on Tuesday, October 6 at the synagogue at 3:45 p.m. (the movie begins at 4 p.m.) Directed by Barry Levinson, this warm, humorous movie chronicles a Jewish immigrant family's journey in Baltimore from the 1910s through the 1960s. It is a tribute to the American dream, changing traditions, and the powerful family stories that bind generations together.

Following the film, we will enjoy a delicious light dinner together along with a guided group discussion; a perfect opportunity to share your own family memories and connect with friends.

The cost for the movie and dinner is $5. Please register with Nancy at jaco824@bex.net.

Everyone is invited to Friday evening services on October 16 at 6 p.m. Cantor Ivor Lichterman will be leading the service. Following services a delicious Shabbat dinner will be served. The cost is $18 per person. Reservations must be made in advance by Monday, October 12 by calling the synagogue office or by emailing Elsa Leveton at elsa@etzchayimtoledo.org.

Our favorite poker and mahj is scheduled for Sunday, October 18 from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. Come join the fun.

I am excited to announce our third Book Club Meeting is scheduled for Sunday, October 25 at 10 a.m. Ken Pargament will be reviewing Hannah Coulter, by Wendell Berry. Please register with Nancy or Elsa and we will send the location details.
